“ Today is Monday, December 29, and memories flood my heart. My day doesn't seem real, I can't think straight, I have many thank you notes and phone calls to our friends and family, my body is tired and can't seem to rest, but I am thankful that the girls and I did all we could and you realized and said you loved the spoiling and being petted. Noboby will forgive my blunders like you or tell me I'm not fat or that outfit looks good when it really didn't. You were my biggest cheerleader. You and I talked of our blessings and how God had let you live through some tough times that surprised the doctors, but we knew who the Great Physician was. You said you were ready to meet your Savior but didn't look forward to how death would come. God answered prayer and you didn't struggle much; I witnessed you as you breathed your last breath - "absent from the body; present with our Lord". He does all things well, even in death. I'll cherish each day and year the Lord gave to us. I love you.##imported-begin##Joyce Hainey##imported-end##
