“ it's almost been 2 years, these past two years I've spent picking up the pieces of myself that were completely destroyed. I knew Eli since 3rd grade. We never had a class together but we would always see each other in the halls, he was first friends with my best friend that's how we started hanging out with each other. His birthday is May 16th, I remember calling his name out on the intercom at school to celebrate his birthday since I was in the school news crew. The reason why I remember is because my birthday is May 15th. A day before his. Every year telling each other birthday wishes. Having that bond that was js us was so special to me. Eli was always to himself but when you'd get to know him he would captivate you with his hilarious personality. He could bring a smile out of any situation. Him and I, as kids do "dated" in 7th grade lol We cut if off pretty quickly tho since we both knew we were better off as friends. Anyway that didn't affect us at all. But I knew he was always hard on himself. The same group of boys who tormented him, tormented me as well. They're boys who love to live off their own ego. They made up so many rumors about me and drove me out of school and I dropped out. Moore took away my best friend, and myself . I lost myself at that school and my biggest regret will be attending there. Bullying is a serious issue no one takes serious there because once we speak up they do absolutely nothing about it . I still haven't processed the fact he's gone. I still hold out hope of one day running into him. My mind can't comprehend I'll never see him again.

I'll never forget about him, I'll think about him all the time. Specially every year during May 10th, 15th, and 16th as long as I live, that will be our week.

Hey you. ☐ thank you for speaking out against that terrible school and about what y'all both went through. I'm so proud that you left and I hope we stay in touch. And I know you're far away but I hope we can meet one day. ☐☐ 🙏🙏

“ i wish you could see everything you are not here for , you deserve to be here . i miss you , i would swap places with you if i got the chance . People pretend to know you and it's heartbreaking because your death was hurtful not just some story for people to gain pity off of , only the people who knew you will know how bad it hurt to lose you . i love you .

“ I had to upload pictures of me and my baby boy. I hate that I wasn't in more photos but I'm thankful for the ones that I do have. Let this be a lesson to you moms out there...

Take the pictures with your babies, no matter what you look like or what you THINK you look like. I gained weight after having my last child and because of hateful comments made to me by other people I no longer would allow photos to be taken of me. A week before Elijah ended his precious life he came upstairs and said "Mom, so and so wants a picture of us" I didn't hesitate! I took my hair down and stood behind him and he snapped the photo. Thank you God for that moment!! Another thing I'd like to say to moms and dads of young teens, sometimes it's ok to snoop through their phones. I never once snooped and if I had then I would have seen the bullying that was going on towards my son. I would have seen how he was wanting to end his life for months and months and months before it happened. It's ok to snoop. I should have. Maybe it would have helped I don't know. Anyways I love my boy. And I'll see you again one day. My sweet angel.

Thank you Blake for the sweet words. Elijah is still with us, even though it doesn't feel that way. But I believe he can see us and hear our words to him. I talk to him 24/7. Whenever I would go to the store at night Elijah always rode with me, it was "our" time. And now when I do that I look over at the passenger seat and run it with my hand and talk to him, often bawling my eyes out. Thank you for loving my son.
