For a man that I only knew for a short time many years ago, he taught me a valuable lesson on respect. That was at 18 years old. I am now 46 and that memory and lesson still stand strong in my life. Thank you Mr. Stone for being real, and for being uncompromising in your convictions. Doug Rice

“ While I did not know Mr. Stone personally, I know his daughter, Suzille and have heard her speak of him lovingly many times. Grief has many phases. To Suzille and the rest of the Mr. Stones' family: grieve in the way you need to, not in the way or time someone tells you that you should. Cry when you want to, for as long as you want to. Laugh at inappropriate times, when a memory reminds you of your loved one. Save things that need to be saved, and discard things that need to go; whether material, or grudges, or even memories.
