“ Uncle Paul opened the world for me. When I was young, he would come over to my grandparents' house with his family to visit and usually then take Robert and me on little side trips out to various places around town. Arcades, the mall, bookstores, lots of different places. And while those places were always fun and entertaining places to visit, that wasn't what mattered most to me. It was the conversations we had. Uncle Paul and I would talk about all sorts of things, and he introduced me to the sheer enormity of the world around me. He introduced me to computers and helped me learn basic programming. He taught me chess. We discussed nearly every topic imaginable, from small quirks of our favorite science fiction shows to the great topics of philosophy and theology (or as much as a 10-year-old boy could handle at the time). He opened my mind and encouraged my growth. My own father was never in the picture, but Uncle Paul was. And I'll always love him for the love, intellectual fire, and emotional support he gave me as a child, when I needed it most.
