“ My favorite memory of Daddy is when we lived in Clinton, S.C. Daddy was raising Boxer's and Missy had had a litter of puppy's, 13, I think. Anyway, at some point, before they were weaned, I began crying like the babies, at night, and Daddy would hit the floor running, to check on them. Me, I thought it was hilarious, because at first, he didn't know the difference. And I, certainly, didn't tell him, because I was afraid of getting in trouble. Now, mind you, I was only 5 or 6. Anyway, after a while, and he not knowing any different, I guess I wanted him to know for a put a bullfrog in his slippers he kept by the back door. By this time, however, mother suspected I was doing the whining because the puppies were always ok. So-o-o, this one night, frog night, she called out, "Susan, you had better come get in the bed with me." Now she didn't know I had put a frog in Daddy's slipper, and I didn't tell her either. We just lay there giggling until Daddy started back in the house and she told me to run get back in bed. BUT, the sound he made, in his hurry to get to those puppy's, he slipped his foot inside those slippers; well it's still one of the funniest things I've ever done. So, Thank You, Mama, for keeping me out of trouble. I love you
