“ Please accept my deepest condolence to the family and friends of Tim. I had not seen Tim in many, many years. In fact, Tim was a very young man the last time I saw him. Though we were cousins, our lives went their separate ways later in life. From my own personal experiences with the loss of loved ones, time will heal the wounds. Give yourself all the time you need to heal--there is no timeline on grief.##imported-begin##Irma Huston Longo##imported-end##

“ *Dear McGaughey,
My sincere condolences to the family. Losing a loved on is the hardest thing that happens in life. Do you know why?
That's because we were never meant to die. We were created to live forever. Because we inherited sin we die (Romans 5:12) BUT, there is HOPE, we have the resurrection hope. Acts 24:15 Talks about the resurrection. So with that in mind you have the possibility of seeing your loved one again. Other comforting scripture is ps 55:22 and Corith1:3,4 I know that these scriptures will help you through the tough times that you are dealing with right now.##imported-begin##Junia Prosper##imported-end##*
