“ I met Tim over 30yrs ago when he was hired at the same company I worked for. The manager was showing him around and brought him over introducing him to everybody. About 20mins later Tim comes back over to me this time without the boss and says "So what's this place really like I know this jackoff is lyin thru this teeth" I laughed and told'em he dam sure is. We worked together a few times over the yrs at different shops. I was just a young buck back then still trying to figure out how to be a man and not doing to well at it. Tim took me under his wing and helped me to become who I am today. He cut me no slack and expected the best from me always. If I got lazy or sloppy Tim would and did several times politely hand me my ass. I loved him for it cause even though it wasn't pleasant he also made you understand he cared about you. Together Tim and I have done so many things together from starting fights(Tim took issue with Mr Protestor at our veterans day parade and told him so) to having deep conversations watchin a sun set. One of my favorite stories of the many funny stories he told me was about his giving up drinking. He said "I really got into the sauce after coming home, I don't remember the 70s but they say I had a good time. But one day I got up in the morning opened the fridge and all I had was a bottle of ketchup and a box of dog biscuits. Dude I didn't have a dog. So I had to give it up"

“ Tim was our neighborhood watchman, he was protective and loved his wife Carol, and his neighbor's. We could depend on Tim for everything from an egg to any tool you can think of. He was always willing and ready to help, even with projects he physically could not do, he was happy to help walk you through it. For 8 short years, we had the honor of being his neighbor, and what I wouldn't give for one more chat with him. I am so thankful his recent health was allowing him to get out and visit often, I would kid him that he was like a spring chicken these days. Tim Richer is already greatly missed and there will forever be a void when I go outside and he's not there. God rest his soul.
